The Divine Connection

She was elected again in The status of women in the 19th-century West has drawn the attention of numerous scholars, whose interpretations fall into three types: 1 the Frontier school influenced by Frederick Jackson Turner which argues that the West was a liberating experience for women and men; 2 the reactionists, who view the West as a place of drudgery for women, who reacted unfavorably to the isolation and difficult work environment in the West; and 3 those writers who claim the West had no distinctive effect on women's lives, that it was a static, neutral frontier. You make an important point; any hope we might have for living a satisfying life inevitably means making the most of the present, and this becomes impossible when our present thoughts and emotions are consumed by the unchangeable past.
